FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

WASHINGTON DC – Justin Schuck and Company, an innovative photography, design and marketing firm, announced today the discovery of 3,673 previously unread emails on it's "Deer" server at SIG's Fremont, California collocation facility.

"As part of our reorganization and the preparation to sell company assets, we discovered thousands of emails that were captured and quarantined by the server since January. There are approximately 600 emails sent from JustinSchuckCo.com and JustinSchuck.com addresses that never reached their intended recipients. No error message was ever delivered to any of the affected emails, nor was there any information in the server log." company president Justin Schuck said, clearly shocked by this discovery. "The unfortunate thing about this is that there were vital communications breakdowns on both sides that may have contributed to misunderstandings between the company and our clients. But the vast majority of email appears to be junk mail. We are aggressively sorting and processing these emails and we will address any problem that might surface."

The discovery of the emails comes at a time when the company is suffering from a dramatic loss in revenue brought on by recent client account defaults, as well as rising energy, vendor, and insurance costs.
