FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

WASHINGTON DC – Justin Schuck and Company, an innovative provider of photography, design and marketing services, announced today that it is moving it's main office from Washington, DC to Dallas, TX in October.

In a news conference broadcast on the web Friday, company president Justin A. Schuck announced "with great enthusiasm and excitement" the relocation of the company to 'The Big D.' "We felt that our interests would best be served by the pro-business atmosphere in Texas, Dallas specifically. The low level of competition in our specific industries will give us an even better market position." he continued.

The company plans to use a broad range of targeted advertising, business partnerships, event sponsorship and charitable donations to establish its identity in Dallas.

Schuck made a specific point during the news conference to assure all existing clients in the primary markets of Washington D.C. and New York City that the company will continue it's operations as normal. "I have been working for several years now to train my photographers and develop a staff that can fully serve our client base. Of course I will make myself available whenever possible, especially on all existing contracts. I love my clients and it's very important for me to continue to work on existing and future contracts."

will still benefit from easy access and a local number. While the company will no longer operate with a formal office in Washington, existing clients. "I'm looking forward to what Dallas offers, but I can't wait to return to Washington and New York with new creative vigor and a stronger company behind me." Schuck said as he closed out the web cast.

The new temporary office is expected to open in North Dallas in early October 2008.
